To The Nuclear Regulatory Commission

I am greatly alarmed at the prospect of the use of low level waste for any purpose whatsoever, rather than burying the waste in dry cell storage, as have many experts suggested.

If this were an acceptable practice, using nuclear waste in the soil, or for any other purpose that would expose people to low level waste (which we know to be far more dangerous than the terminology would imply) why would it not be joyfully announced to the public at large, rather than being utilized (potentially) in secrecy?

With considerable concern,

Alisha Ritt
