Comments: I find it nauseating to think that once again a government agency is eager to use citizens as laboratory rats. I have played that role, as far as I know, only once before during the infamous Gulf War. I will now have to live with my questionable health issues for the rest of my life. It is no less than incredible that anyone would consider intentionally exposing another human being to any material that may be "contaminated" with radio activity at "any" level. Just how desperate are you for research data? Perhaps the agency should construct a sand box, fill it with this stuff and go play in it during their breaks. Afterall, you can't beat first hand knowledge! Or is it as always just about money?
