The Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) has appointed Stephen L. Rosen to its independent Advisory Committee on Reactor Safeguards (ACRS).

During a career of more than three decades, Mr. Rosen has been involved in nuclear power plant research, design, licensing, construction, engineering, operations, maintenance and risk analysis of boiling and pressurized water reactors. Previously, he held management positions with Boston Edison. He received his Bachelors degree in Chemical Engineering in 1962 and his Masters degree in Nuclear Engineering in 1967, both from Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute.

The ACRS was established in 1957 by the Congress to advise the former Atomic Energy Commission and subsequently the Nuclear Regulatory Commission with regard to the safety aspects of the proposed and existing nuclear facilities and the adequacy of related safety standards. The ACRS also performs other special assignments that the Commission may request, such as a review of the NRC research program.
