To Whom It May Concern:

Recently I read an article in the National Geographic Magazine regarding "The Lethal Legacy of America's Nuclear Waste" which I suppose thousands of other citizens have done. I know many persons are deeply concerned about safety, environmental contamination, etc. with respect to said waste. However, with the resources of brain power and talents of many brilliant minds throughout the world, it seems a disgrace and the height of arrogance for the government to expend billions and billions of dollars to "bury", "seal", "hide", or dispose of a substance which has a potential energy source which can supply the needs of mankind for an indefinite time in the future. While I appreciate the need for expenditures for the protection of the citizenry, it saddens me no end that very little is being done to employ "said waste" to a positive and beneficial use. True, perhaps all of you are doing all you can to utilize "said waste" for the good of society. If so, I have seen or heard nothing of same.

Instead of expending billions and billions to "bury" "said waste", would it not be much wiser and more prudent to at least engage some brilliant minds to investigate the possibility of utilizing "said waste" for beneficial projects?

Sincerely yours,

Arnold Wesche
