Subject: Re: Clearance needed to publish RES reports

Mabel and Gene,

The current policy is that if the office review team believes the content of the NUREG is benign and contains no sensitive information, publication can go forward. Obviously, this is the offices' judgment call. However, if there is any question about the sensitivity of the document, it should be held until the Commission's criteria for discretionary release of documents becomes final. As far as the web review is concerned, Gil Millman is heading this up for RES and has developed a priority system for publication of NUREG documents on the web. Publication of NUREGs on the web will not occur until the Commission has approved the final criteria. I hope this clears up any confusion...

Gene:

I know about the Nov 6 memo. Gil Millman was checking with Walt Oliu regarding this issue. There appears to be a disconnect between this memo and what we are hearing from Minday Landau (OEDO) and Fran. I am of the understanding that additional guidance was forthcoming before we can comment and review the NUREGS. Additionally, I understand that the Commission has not approved this NUREG. In any case, I am sure the CC's I have on this Email will set me straight. I will be out until Dec 3, but will be checking my Emails until then.

Thanks,
Mabel

Ms. Lee,

I just received a call from Ms. Linda Stevenson of the Publications Services Branch. She said a PSB memorandum dated November 6 (ADAMS # ML013100011) had been sent to you requesting a statement that RES report NUREG/CR-6749 (Integrating Digital and Conventional Human System Interfaces: Lessons Learned from a Control Room Modernization Program) did not contain sensitive information and could be released for printing. She said a release is needed for 17 RES reports awaiting publication.

Thank you,
Gene

PS - I did not try to verify any of this, as I assume you will have the November 6 memo.
