Subject: Remember Browns Ferry!

A couple of months ago I read an eye-opening article in Vanity Fair about lax security at nuclear power plants. Even as I found that piece to be deeply disturbing so do I find disturbing your agencies proposal to court a different sort of disaster by weakening fire code regulations for nuclear power plants by letting non compliant plants to disregard the automated override systems in favor of a manual plan. Like that would work. If the people in charge of nuclear reactors are currently flouting the safety laws it seems to me it is incumbent upon you to implement stricter inspections and fines, not roll over and show them your belly. I strongly urge you to hold these irresponsible operator's feet to the fire, but, judging from what I read in Vanity Fair, I'm not holding out much hope.
