Wayne, I think the answer itself needs to be clarified. We identified certain documents and collections of material to be taken off the web and ADAMS PARS before the web shut down. Obviously, once the entire web shut down, we did not remove all the same material from PARS. However, all offensive information originally identified was removed from both locations. I think the answer is still accurate with clarification.

Tom & Beth,

In response to the question:

"In the current set of Qs and As for the Chairman to prepare for his interview, there is a statement saying, "all material removed from our web was removed from ADAMS as well." Is this accurate?

Mindy is coordinating the effort to remove documents from public access but I'll answer the question from what I know.

Answer: No, it is not an accurate statement. Initially, prior to the week of October 8, specific documents identified by technical staff as having potentially sensitive information were being removed from the external Web site, the ADAMS Public Library (NOT ADAMS only the ADAMS Public Library), and the PDR collection here at NRC.

However, during the week of October 12 the external Web site was totally shut down and brought back up on October 17 with very limited information. The specific documents and categories of information removed from the external Web site after it was brought down and before it was brought back up were not necessarily also removed from the ADAMS Public Library. We continued to receive requests to remove specific documents from the ADAMS Public Library but nowhere near the total volume or categories that were removed from the Web.
