KSIR release

The FAA no fly zone expired on Nov. 7.

This is the dilemma of attempting to regulate the websites. FAA had to put out the info to notify pilots where "not to go." That means, they have to identify the nuclear power plant, and location, etc.

I don't think it makes much sense to seek to control organizations building off published FAA information that comes from the FAA site.....

The positive aspect of the whole activity is that a malevolent individual cannot go direct to NRC or the nuclear industry for information.

Joe and Dick... this web site takes info from the FAA web site and elaborates on it... do you think we should ask this group to take it down? I'm not sure of the status of the no fly zone, info that FAA provided on their web site, etc.

Mindy:

As discussed in our telecon here is the website pointed out to us by a concerned individual.

<http://www.jepesen.com/onlinepubs/notams.phtml>

This site contains Low Altitude Enroute and VFR charts for each nuclear power plant location.
