Release 2 of the NRC's Redesigned Public Web Site Now Available

Release 2 of our redesigned public web site is now available at www.nrc.gov. This marks the second step in our plan to deploy the remainder of the site in a phased approach between now and early 2002. See the site's What's New page for updates of new content for each release and plans for future releases.

Release 2 includes top level pages for Nuclear Reactors, Nuclear Materials, and Radioactive Waste. Within the reactor section, material of high public interest includes the NRC Regulatory Information Conference and information about Reactor License Renewal. This release also includes site search, Inspector General program information, and information for students and teachers. Release 3 will continue to build on the content currently available for Nuclear Reactors, Nuclear Materials, and Radioactive Waste. In addition to a notice on our site's home page, we will issue a Press Release to inform the media and the public of the availability of our new site.

A thorough review of site content is ongoing as a result of the events of September 11, 2001. Information not yet available is shown as "blacked-out" links.
