Dear Secretary:

I just want to let you know that my parents, my husband, and I are concerned -- very concerned -- about the inactivity and stone-walling that our nuclear facilities have demonstrated in the area of trying to strengthen the safety of our nuclear power plants from any potential terrorist attack.

I've read that the improvements using I-beams and steel cabling could go a long way in reinforcing our facilities and protecting them from harm. It doesn't sound like that'd cost very much. Look at the money we're pouring into Iraq -- and that's not making us safer but, in fact, a more vulnerable and attractive target.

Couldn't the government shift some funds over and improve the safety situation here at home? I don't understand why it wasn't done 3 years ago.

Is politics getting in the way? Well, shove it aside and take some concrete steps to make us safer, as our government continues to promise to do.

Thank you-

Alison Ehlers, with
Phil Roberson, Betsy Kerr, and Richard Kerr.
