Phil,

I am closing out a URI on manual actions that was just a big question mark. What we are concluding is that STP had identified multiple spurious actuations which could occur due to potential fire damage which were not protected. These were recognized in the SER, which stated that the manual actions were reviewed and appeared simple and practicable (or similar wording).

[REDACTED] They had a "calculation" that simply listed the actions, with time requirements, by fire area. The actions which were common to all fire areas were taken out and listed in a "Fire Area All" section, which operators mostly were unaware of. [REDACTED]
