A letter back to him is appropriate, but since we know the response to the item (i.e., that it is not prima facie, and we will not initiate an investigation), it doesn't meet the definition of an allegation and should be handled as an RA Action Item. The letter can be written in a "conditional" fashion, giving him the opportunity to come back to us is if he can provide any additional information that will make a link between his prior protected activity and the current alleged adverse action. The RA Action Item response will be due on 12/15/03, 30 days from his initial phoen call to the Region.

I agree with Dave's and Brad's assessment of the situation. Since alleger hasn't made a prima facie showing, the letter back is the way to go, in my opinion.
