He was a consultant working on SCWE at Millstone when the fuel was determined to be missing there. And neither Mr. Shadis nor Mr. Blanch had anything to do with the fuel discovery (make that non-discovery) at VY. Sigh, indeed!

The "doughnut factory" analogy was one thing. Now he's getting carried away.

Blanch once again called on Entergy Corporation, owner of Vermont Yankee, to engage in a public dialogue on the technical aspects of the uprate.

"We need to communicate," said Blanch. "This isn't a Ben and Jerry's factory. This isn't a Vermont Teddy Bear factory. This isn't a maple sugar house. This is a nuclear power plant. The public needs to be involved."
