Richard,

This may not be precisely pertinent to anything at hand, but there is something I would like you to know.

Ten years ago, when I was negotiating with GPU over spent fuel -- in relation to my appeal of a zoning board decision -- I learned quite a bit about used nuclear fuel.

A main point you may wish to keep in mind is that in terms of ease of transfer not all nuclear fuel is created equal. Over the years in which the fuel has been irradiated there has been a wide variety in the "cladding" of the fuel assemblies. Some of the assemblies are easy to move around; some may be extremely difficult or risky.

One of the reasons these guys may resist or stall on requirements to move to dry storage may be that a lot of the fuel is not safe or easy to move.
