I am very much opposed to the development and use of a "generic" EIS (GEIS) for the recovery of uranium ore. Given the complexity of the process, the repercussions of "getting it wrong" and the uniqueness of each potential site from long term contamination to impact on cultural mores cannot be appropriately addressed in a generic EIS.

Further, the issuance of a guidance with only approximately one month to consider the proposed action is simply not adequate for dissemination of the proposal.

I question why public meetings are not being held in locations where immediate activity is being proposed.

Sincerely

Jerry Ellinghuysen
