Fiesta

We the People have no need for more poisonous nuclear reactors in Georgia.

The folks at the NRC want the taxpayers to foot the bill (with our tax money, and our health) for two more reactors.

Considering the massive amount of water they would need, the warming of the water they release (killing the fish in that waterway), the risks and health dangers they represent, the toxic and radioactive waste they produce (that no state wants to take, and will unfairly burden our children and grandchildren with its horrific problems), only a fool or a lapdog for the nuclear industry would dare propose its continued use.

We're getting closer all the time to fuel cells, solar panels, and other technologies that will soon make our country totally energy-independent, without poisoning ourselves in the process. To continue down a failed path like nuclear energy despite all the negatives associated with it, and to willingly saddle our descendents with the radioactive waste it produces, is morally wrong. It's like spitting in your own grandchildren's faces.

Sincerely,

Robert Wagner
