Survey of Federal Civilian Law Enforcement Mandatory Basic Training

Why GAO Did This Study

Federal law enforcement officers (LEO) are required to complete mandatory basic training in order to exercise their law enforcement authorities.

GAO was asked to identify federal mandatory law enforcement basic training programs. This report builds on GAO's prior work surveying federal civilian law enforcement components regarding their functions and authorities (see GAO-07-121, December 2006). GAO defined an LEO as an individual authorized to perform any of four functions: conduct criminal investigations, execute search warrants, make arrests, or carry firearms. In this report GAO describes (1) the mandatory basic law enforcement training that the components reported requiring their LEOs to complete and the federal law enforcement job series classifications for which basic training programs are mandatory; and (2) a breakdown of the delivery of the of basic training programs, by type of organization providing the training and location.

To conduct this work, GAO administered a Web-based survey to 105 federal civilian law enforcement components. Each was requested to self-report on, required basic training programs for LEOs, the organizations conducting the training, training locations, and the job series for which programs are mandatory. GAO is not making recommendations.

What GAO Found

Based on the responses of the 105 federal civilian law enforcement components surveyed, GAO identified 76 unique mandatory basic training programs. Among these, four programs in particular were cited by the components more often than others as mandatory for their LEOs (see table). Of the remaining 72 unique basic training programs, each was common to just one to three components. Some of these basic training programs are required for job series classifications representing large portions of the overall LEO population. For example, newly hired employees at the Federal Bureau of Prisons encompass 159 different job series classifications. This large number of job series classifications is required to take the same two unique basic training programs.

Of the 105 components surveyed, 37 components reported exclusively using the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center (FLETC)—the largest single provider of law enforcement training for the federal government. Another 44 components reported using a combination of FLETC and other training organizations, including their own organization, a federal or state law enforcement agency, or commercial vendor. Thirteen components reported that they did not use FLETC but instead conducted their own training programs and used their own facilities. Eleven components reported hiring LEOs who had already received basic training.

<sup>a</sup>Some of these components required more than one program. For example, all 15 components requiring the Inspector General Investigator Training Program also required the Criminal Investigator Training Program.

A draft of this report was provided for comment to the agencies included in the survey. Their technical comments were incorporated as appropriate.

Basic training is designed to provide new law enforcement officers (LEO) with the basic skills needed to properly perform their duties.<sup>1</sup> In recent years, as the number of federal LEOs has risen, so too has the need for the federal government to provide basic training. According to a Bureau of Justice Statistics report, between 2002 and 2004, the number of LEOs with the authority to make arrests and carry firearms increased 13 percent from about 93,000 to about 105,000. We reported in December 2006<sup>2</sup> that there were about 138,000 LEOs in the federal civilian government when two additional responsibilities are considered—authority to conduct criminal investigations and execute search warrants.

In this report, which builds on our December 2006 report that addressed the law enforcement functions and authorities of federal civilian components, we provide information on mandatory basic law enforcement training programs.<sup>3</sup> As agreed with your office, we excluded the law enforcement components of the Department of Defense and the <sup>1</sup>For purposes of this report, an LEO is defined as those law enforcement officers authorized to perform any of the following four law enforcement functions: make arrests, carry firearms, conduct criminal investigations, and execute search warrants. This definition is based upon our prior work, interviews with federal agencies employing LEOs, and other sources.

<sup>2</sup>GAO, Federal Law Enforcement: Survey of Federal Civilian Law Enforcement Functions and Authorities, GAO-07-121, and its electronic supplement, Federal Law Enforcement: Results of Surveys of Federal Civilian Law Enforcement Components, GAO-07-223SP (Washington, D.C.: Dec. 19, 2006).

<sup>3</sup>For purposes of this report, mandatory basic law enforcement training program is defined as a continuous instructional activity that any federal civilian component requires its LEOs to complete in order to earn the component's approval to exercise law enforcement authority. A component refers to an agency, office or other sub-unit of a department or nondepartmental entity.

intelligence community from the scope of our review. Specifically, this report describes (1) the mandatory basic law enforcement training programs that components reported requiring their LEOs to complete and the federal law enforcement job series classifications for which the basic training programs are mandatory, and (2) a breakdown of the delivery of basic training programs, by type of organization conducting the training and location.

To obtain information on mandatory basic law enforcement training, we administered a Web-based survey to 105 federal civilian components and requested each to identify the basic training programs that they require their LEOs to complete, the organizations that conduct the programs, training locations, training duration, the job series for which the programs are mandatory, and the general topics covered in the training programs.<sup>4</sup> Additional detail on these topics and a copy of the survey are provided in an electronic supplement we are issuing with this report—GAO-07-1066SP.

This report contains self-reported information from each law enforcement component surveyed. While we did not independently verify the accuracy of all the information provided to us, after receiving the completed surveys, we conducted quality control checks by analyzing the responses to identify inconsistencies. We offered each law enforcement component the opportunity to make any corrections to its original responses by returning copies of their original survey responses to them for review. Finally, we submitted copies of the draft report to each component for comment. Further explanation of our scope and methodology is provided in appendix I. Appendix II contains a list of all 105 components we surveyed.

Our work was performed from October 2006 to July 2007.

<sup>4</sup>There were 105 federal civilian components participating in our mandatory law enforcement basic training survey, one more component than in our prior work. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration informed us after we issued our December 2006 report (GAO-07-121) and during the mandatory basic training survey that it had an additional component—the Program Protection Force of its Office of Security and Program Protection—that employed personnel meeting our criteria for LEOs.

Four Basic Training Programs Associated with 17 Job Series Classifications Were Most Often Required by the Components

Based on the responses of the 105 federal civilian components we surveyed, we identified 76 unique mandatory basic training programs.<sup>5</sup> See appendix III, tables 5 and 6, for a list of all 76 programs, the organizations conducting them, and components citing them as mandatory. Four programs in particular were cited by the components more often than others as mandatory for their LEOs, as shown in table 1.

<sup>a</sup>Some of these components required more than one program. For example, all 15 components requiring the Inspector General Investigator Training Program also required the Criminal Investigator Training Program.

In addition, out of the 211 federal LEO job series classifications that the components reported to us for our December 2006 report, LEOs in 17 different job series classifications were required to complete one or more of the four most cited programs, as shown in table 2. See appendix IV, tables 7 and 8, for a complete list of job series classifications and their associated basic training programs.

<sup>5</sup>We counted a program as unique if (1) multiple components cited the exact program title or a close variation and specified the same training organization and location, or (2) only one component cited the program title and specified a different training organization and location.

The total of 76 excludes 3 mandatory basic training programs that the Department of Interior informed us about during the final processing of this report. The programs, all required by the Department's National Park Service, are the Field Training and Evaluation Program and the Ranger Basic Training Program, which are conducted by the National Park Service; and the Seasonal Law Enforcement Training Program, which is conducted by 9 colleges and universities across the United States. Also, the Department stated that National Park Service's Law Enforcement, Security and Emergency Services office requires its 1811 job series LEOs to take FLETC's Criminal Investigator Training Program. The tables and appendices in this report do not reflect this additional information and the electronic supplement accounts for it in the "Additional Comments" column.

<sup>a</sup>Generally the 4-digit job series classifications are designated by the U.S. Office of Personnel Management (OPM). Non-OPM classifications are generally designated either by a job title or other combination of numbers and job title.

<sup>b</sup>Job series 1801, 1802, and 1811 were listed for more than one program.

Of the remaining 72 unique basic training programs, each was common to just one to three components. Some of these basic training programs are required for job series classifications representing large portions of the overall LEO population. For example, DOJ Federal Bureau of Prisons (BOP) requires newly hired LEOs among 159 different job series classifications to take the same two unique basic training programs. The BOP LEOs accounted for 25 percent of the LEO population as of June 2006. Similarly, DHS U.S. Customs and Border Protection's Office of Field Operations requires newly hired LEOs within the 1895 CBP officer job series classification to take three basic training programs unique to U.S. Customs and Border Protection. CBP officers accounted for 13 percent of the LEOs.

The Largest Source of Law Enforcement Basic Training Is the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center

According to our survey results, federal civilian law enforcement components obtain their mandatory basic training through one source or a combination of training sources. The components reported 62 different organizations as sources of their basic training.<sup>6</sup> Appendix V provides a list of all training organizations reported in the survey. The largest single source for basic law enforcement training is the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center (FLETC).<sup>7</sup>

Of the 105 federal civilian components we surveyed, 81 reported using basic training resources from FLETC or a combination of FLETC and other organizations, such as their own organization; other federal law enforcement agencies; state and local law enforcement agencies; and commercial vendors.<sup>8</sup> Eleven of the 105 federal civilian components reported that they hired LEOs who had already received basic training for previous law enforcement positions.<sup>9</sup> Two of the 11 components reported they hired LEOs for one job series and required a basic training program for another job series. See appendix VI. One component—the Department of Agriculture, Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service—did not provide details on its mandatory basic training but stated that formal training provided to its investigators varied based on each individual’s

<sup>6</sup>Two components reported state-level academies and training facilities but did not list any specific training organization: the Department of Transportation, Office of the Secretary of Transportation, Executive Protection reported “Federal/State/Military Police Academy Training” and the National Railroad Passenger Corporation (AMTRAK), AMTRAK Police reported “Several state police or authorized state training facilities.”

<sup>7</sup>Among the other 61 training organizations reported, there was not 1 dominant provider, except for the Inspector General Criminal Investigator Academy, which 15 components reported using.

<sup>8</sup>In commenting on a draft of this report, one of these components, the Federal Reserve Board’s Security Unit, stated that it also uses FLETC resources during the firearms training of its mandatory basic law enforcement training program.

<sup>9</sup>In commenting on a draft of this report, the Federal Reserve Board stated that its Chairman’s Protection Unit tends to hire special agents who have prior FLETC training. Because the Chairman’s Protection Unit answered in its survey that it had a mandatory basic training program, we did not include it in the list of 11 components, which appears in appendix VI.

skills, abilities, and experience, and that courses were provided at FLETC and other facilities.<sup>10</sup>

FLETC, which was established in 1970 within the Department of the Treasury and transferred to the Department of Homeland Security in 2003, provides basic, specialized, advanced and refresher training for federal, state and local law enforcement agencies. FLETC currently has 83 federal partner organizations, 71 of which we surveyed for this report.<sup>11</sup> A list of these partner organizations appears in appendix VII. According to FLETC, the partner organization designation means the head of the agency has signed a memorandum of understanding setting forth an agreement between FLETC and the agency. According to FLETC, the partner organization status offers the benefit of priority in training and a lower cost for the training than for non-partner organizations. Other nonfederal law enforcement agencies, such as state, local, and international law enforcement agencies, may train at FLETC on a space-available basis.

FLETC provides training at four locations in the United States as follows:<sup>12</sup>

- The Glynco, Georgia, location was established in 1975 and is FLETC's headquarters and largest training complex at 1,563 acres. Glynco's facilities include classrooms, dormitories, a dining hall, firearms ranges, driver training ranges, a physical techniques facility, an explosives range, and a mock port of entry.
- The Artesia, New Mexico, location was established in 1989 and is responsible for basic training for the U.S. Customs and Border

<sup>10</sup>In commenting on a draft of this report, the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service stated that its investigators participate with sworn law enforcement officers (i.e., Office of Inspector General criminal investigators or state law enforcement officers) in conducting criminal investigations and obtaining and executing search warrants. It added that while these investigators do not have the authority to conduct criminal investigations activity on their own, it ensures that they are properly trained and prepared to independently conduct non-criminal investigations.

<sup>11</sup>Twelve of FLETC's partner organizations did not participate in our survey. Nine organizations are in the Department of Defense and intelligence community, which we excluded from our scope. The other three organizations—the Department of Interior's Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement, Department of Transportation's Federal Aviation Administration, and Department of the Treasury's Financial Crimes Enforcement Network—indicated to us that they did not have LEOs meeting our criteria.

<sup>12</sup>FLETC also has international law enforcement academies in Gaborone, Botswana; San Salvador, El Salvador; and Lima, Peru.

Protection Border Patrol, Bureau of Indian Affairs, Transportation Security Administration, Federal Flight Deck Officers, and Federal Air Marshals.

- The Cheltenham, Maryland, location was established in 2001 to provide firearms requalification and pursuit driver training programs for LEOs based in the Washington, D.C., metropolitan area. Cheltenham also provides facilities for the U.S. Capitol Police Academy.
- The Charleston, South Carolina, location was established in FLETC in 2003 and hosts the U.S. Coast Guard Maritime Law Enforcement Academy and the Federal Probation and Pretrial Services Academy.

Of the 81 federal civilian components that reported using FLETC resources (such as instructors, programs, and/or facilities), 37 reported using FLETC resources exclusively to meet their basic training requirements. The other 44 components reported using a combination of FLETC and other training organizations. Table 3 shows the total number of components that reported using the various FLETC locations.

<sup>a</sup>The sum of the column “Number of components using training facilities” is greater than the 81 components that reported using FLETC resources as some components reported receiving basic training at more than one FLETC location.

Among the 105 federal civilian components we surveyed, 13 reported that they did not use FLETC resources for their mandatory basic training programs, but instead conducted their own training programs and used their own facilities; among this group, one component, the Department of Transportation Maritime Administration’s Academy Security Force, used a commercial vendor. These 13 components and the sources of their training are listed in table 4.<sup>13</sup>

Agency Comments

We provided the 105 components that we surveyed with a draft of report for comment. A number of components provided technical corrections, additions, and deletions to their original responses. These technical comments were incorporated in the report where appropriate.

<sup>13</sup>As previously discussed, 11 components reported hiring LEOs who have already received basic training.

Appendix I: Scope and Methodology

To identify the mandatory training programs that federal civilian components require for their law enforcement officers (LEO), we administered a Web-based survey that collected training information from 105 federal civilian components.<sup>1</sup> A copy of this survey can be viewed via the electronic supplement link provided on page 2 of this report. The training survey requested from each federal component a list of (1) mandatory basic training programs for the LEOs who were authorized to perform at least one of the four following law enforcement functions—conduct criminal investigations, execute search warrants, make arrests, or carry firearms; (2) topics covered by each program; (3) job series of the LEOs required to complete each training program; (4) name of the organization that conducted each training program; and (5) location of each training program. This survey was administered between October 2006 and May 2007. We obtained a 100 percent response rate for the training survey.

This report contains self-reported information from each federal civilian LEO component surveyed. While we administered the training survey to obtain the training information for this report, we also referred to December 2006 report (GAO-07-121 and its electronic supplement GAO-07-223SP) for information on law enforcement functions and job series classifications for each LEO component. Prior to completing the training survey, we reported on the first two Web-based surveys (law enforcement authority survey and job series survey) in December 2006. The first of the two surveys requested that each component state its law enforcement mission and list the primary authorities for its LEOs to perform any of the four specified law enforcement functions. The types of authorities sought through the survey were those based on statutory sources (e.g., United States Code), regulatory sources (e.g., Code of Federal Regulations), and other sources, such as executive orders, agency directives, or memorandums of understanding between agencies. This survey was administered between June 2006 and October 2006. We obtained a 100 percent response rate for the law enforcement authority survey.

The second of the two surveys requested that each component list the OPM job series or other job identifier of the LEOs who were authorized to perform at least one of the four specified law enforcement functions mentioned above and the number of LEOs employed for each job series and titles as of June 30, 2006. This survey was administered between August 2006 and October 2006. We obtained a 100 percent response rate for the job series survey.

Since the training survey and the two previous surveys were not sample surveys, there are no sampling errors. However, the practical difficulties of conducting any survey may have introduced errors, commonly referred to as nonsampling errors. For example, the accuracy of the survey results could have been influenced by (1) difficulties in how a particular question was interpreted by respondents, (2) the sources of information that were available to respondents, or (3) how we processed and analyzed the responses we received. We took the following steps in the development of the surveys, the data collection, and the data analysis to minimize these potential nonsampling errors and to help ensure the accuracy of the answers that we obtained.

To define an LEO for the purposes of our three Web-based law enforcement surveys, we identified which types of law enforcement functions would be used by consulting our previous work on federal law enforcement authorities and personnel,<sup>2</sup> law enforcement related documentation from the U.S. Office of Personnel Management,<sup>3</sup> and interviews with officials with expertise in law enforcement functions of various civilian agencies employing LEOs.

Additionally, we determined which federal components might employ LEOs performing any of the four specified law enforcement functions by compiling an initial list based on the federal agencies: listed in Federal Law Enforcement Officers, 2002, published by the Department of Justice's Bureau of Justice Statistics; identified as FLETC's partner organizations and other agencies included in FLETC's 2004-2005 List of Agencies Trained at FLETC; and listed in the Federal Citizen Information Center's Cabinet Agencies and Independent Agencies and Commissions Directory.

Furthermore, in our prior work as in this report, the term “federal law enforcement officer” can be defined in numerous ways depending on the information sought. To best meet the information needs of the requester and the time frame for reporting, it was necessary to limit our scope to law enforcement officers employed directly by the federal government, as well as exclude certain agencies or components. We refined the list of federal components to survey by submitting our initial list to the components’ parent departments and nondepartmental entities for corrections and additions. This compilation was not intended to reflect all personnel in the federal law enforcement community. For example, we did not include contract services, civilian law enforcement officers and investigators within the Department of Defense (DOD) or the DOD Offices of Inspector General, intelligence agencies, and U.S. Attorneys within the Department of Justice.<sup>4</sup>

To identify the specific information to collect in the training survey—such as components’ mandatory basic training programs for law enforcement officers; the topics covered in each training program; the agencies, academies, vendors, or other organizations that conducted the training; and location of each training program—we conducted initial interviews with officials with law enforcement training expertise from the Department of Homeland Security and Department of Justice. We developed and pretested the survey with three components with diverse missions, and of varying sizes (e.g., National Park Service of the Department of Interior, U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement of the Department of Homeland Security, and the U.S. Government Accountability Office) to identify unclear and ambiguous questions. Upon completion of the pretest, we made the necessary changes to the final survey prior to nationwide implementation.

To help ensure that the training survey was sent to knowledgeable component officials (e.g., officials with law enforcement training knowledge), we requested that the designated GAO liaisons of each component identify these knowledgeable officials and provide their contact information. As necessary, we also followed up with these officials to clarify survey responses.

<sup>4</sup>According to a DOJ official, many DOJ attorneys are authorized to conduct criminal investigations and routinely manage such investigations as Assistant United States Attorneys, Legal Division Trial Attorneys, or in related positions.

All of the data in this report are what were reported by the 105 federal civilian components through our three Web-based surveys. We did not independently verify the accuracy of all the information provided to us. We did, however, after receiving the completed surveys, examine the survey results and perform computer analyses to identify inconsistencies and other possible indications of error. An independent analyst reviewed all the computer programs used in the processing of the data. Also, in March 2007, we returned copies of the training survey responses to the 105 federal civilian components to make any corrections to their original responses. Further, we conducted quality control checks via telephone and e-mail with the survey respondents to follow up on possible internal data inconsistencies or other issues needing clarification, such as unanswered questions or data entry errors. A number of the components provided technical corrections, additions, and/or deletions to their original responses and some were incorporated where appropriate in a draft of the report sent to the components for comment. After taking these steps, we continued to find that some survey respondents reported different program titles, program durations, training organizations, and/or topics covered for the same FLETC training programs. We reconciled the program titles but not all of the other differences. The information shown in the report and the electronic supplement represents what the agencies provided. An example of these differences is the Criminal Investigator Training Program. Respondents from 52 federal civilian law enforcement components referred to this program by 16 different program titles and inserted program information that included 9 different program durations and 45 different combinations of the training topics covered. According to FLETC officials, FLETC conducts the Criminal Investigator Training Program in the same manner for all who take it and the program currently lasts 11 weeks.

Appendix VI: The 11 Federal Civilian Components That Reported Hiring LEOs Who Had Already Taken Basic Training for Previous Law Enforcement Positions

Federal civilian component	Comments by component
Department of Commerce, Office of Security <sup>a</sup>	OSY does not provide a mandatory basic law enforcement training program for its security specialists (0080) deputized as Special Deputy U.S. Marshals. OSY does require deputized personnel to have already completed a basic training program accepted by U.S. Marshal Service prior to employment.
Department of Homeland Security, U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services	U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services hires personnel that have received training and experience with another Federal agency.
Department of Homeland Security, U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement, Office of Intelligence	Must be qualified to be selected from selection list.
Department of the Interior, Office of Law Enforcement, Security and Emergency Management	The Office of Law Enforcement, Security and Emergency Management hires LEOs who have already received basic training at another federal agency or office within the Department of Interior.
Department of Transportation, National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, Odometer Fraud	National Highway Traffic Safety Administration hires criminal investigators/special agents and requires FLETC's Criminal Investigator Training Program or a functional equivalent state or local training program and criminal investigation experience as a prerequisite.
Federal Communications Commission, Office of the Inspector General	Any series 0905, 1810 or 1811 the Federal Communications Commission, Office of the Inspector General (FCC OIG) hires for law enforcement purposes (execute search warrants, arrest warrants, etc.) would have had the requisite mandatory law enforcement training before he or she would be employed for the OIG at the FCC. The FCC OIG does employ series 0905 attorneys who do not engage in these law enforcement activities.
Government Accountability Office, Controller/Administrative Services, Office of Security and Safety	GAO Office of Security Safety hires already trained LEOs.
Government Accountability Office, Financial Management and Assurance, Forensic Audits and Special Investigations	Agents hired by GAO are experienced Agents who have already attended and graduated from a basic agent academy. The GAO Forensic Audits and Special Investigations (FSI) team hires 1811 criminal investigators who have already fulfilled the mandatory basic law enforcement training required to become criminal investigator. In addition to the basic requirements, GAO-FSI requests and requires its criminal investigators to take the appropriate training to become Certified Fraud Examiners.
National Railroad Passenger Corporation (AMTRAK), Office of Inspector General	NRPC OIG Office of Investigations (OI) Criminal Investigator/Special Agents are largely comprised of a diverse group of former and retired state and federal law enforcement officers who have received sworn law enforcement academy training at their respective prior entities, e.g., FLETC, Glynco, Ga.; FBI, Quantico, Va.; Metropolitan Police Academy, Washington, D.C. Most OI Special Agents, where appropriately credentialed, currently serve with U.S. Marshal Special Deputation. NRPC OIG OI Criminal Investigator/Special Agents attend ongoing in-service mandatory training, including, but not limited to, firearms qualification, defensive tactics, anti- and counter terrorism, interview skills, search and seizure, and arrest, and law enforcement legal liability issues. NRPC OIG OI staff include certified law enforcement and/or trained instructors. NRPC OIG OI Special Agents also receive legal instruction, direction, and training from the OIG Office of Legal Counsel, comprised of former DOJ, federal, and state prosec

Appendix VI: The 11 Federal Civilian Components That Reported Hiring LEOs Who Had Already Taken Basic Training for Previous Law Enforcement Positions

Federal civilian component	Comments by component
Nuclear Regulatory Commission, Office of Investigations	OI hires only experienced agents at the 12/13 grade who have completed a basic 1811 training program.
Smithsonian Institution, Office of Protection Services <sup>a</sup>	The ZP-083 - Zoo Police are all former police officers from other agencies who have attended a police academy so we do not need to provide them any basic entry level training.

Source: GAO analysis of mandatory basic training survey results.

<sup>a</sup>This component has specific mandatory basic training programs for one of more other LEO job series it uses.

Note: In commenting on a draft of this report, the Federal Reserve Board stated that its Chairman's Protection Unit tends to hire special agents who have prior FLETC training. Because the Chairman's Protection Unit answered in its survey that it had a mandatory basic training program, we did not include it in this list.

<sup>a</sup>We excluded the components of the Department of Defense and intelligence community from our survey scope. The other Partner organizations not participating in our survey informed us that they did not have LEOs meeting our criteria, that an LEO must have the authority to perform at least one of the specified four law enforcement functions.

GAO's Mission

The Government Accountability Office, the audit, evaluation and investigative arm of Congress, exists to support Congress in meeting its constitutional responsibilities and to help improve the performance and accountability of the federal government for the American people. GAO examines the use of public funds; evaluates federal programs and policies; and provides analyses, recommendations, and other assistance to help Congress make informed oversight, policy, and funding decisions. GAO's commitment to good government is reflected in its core values of accountability, integrity, and reliability.
