Dear Mr. Montgomery,

I have attached a short letter outlining the safety precautions which will be utilized during gauge disassembly.

For the majority of the gauges to be disassembled for source disposal, the source activity ranges from approximately 10 mCi to 500 mCi of Cs-137. These levels of activity are not extremely hazardous nor require extensive radiation protection, only appropriate considerations for time, distance, and shielding, as well as proper planning.

There are approximately 11 sources with activity greater than 500 mCi, which will require some additional caution, additional shielding, additional planning, increased distance, concerns over exposure time, etc. These gauge heads will be disassembled last for source disposal, and if any difficulties arise, they will be handled by an outside company / facility, if necessary.
