When you get a chance and have some extra time on your hands, look at NUREG-1055 "Improving Quality and the Assurance of Quality in the Design and Construction of Nuclear Power Plants. (ML063000293). It is a 1984 document that was developed after all the problems with QA at nuclear plants under construction. It is also referred to as the Ford Report. It is 500+ pages long, so you probably don't care to read the whole thing, but you will find some very relevant information in Chapter 2 "Summary." A key point with the problem plants was the failure to treat QA as a management tool. This has been so very relevant in the past (pre-Sproat era) at YM.

As we develop our YM inspection program, there are some good lessons to take with us from this report.

Jack, I would recommend that DOE needs to take a look at this document.

PS I have NUREG-1055 electronically and can forward it to you upon request. I don't know which will take longer, sending it to you or you getting it off Adams. If you want me to send it to you, reply to this email. Just recognize it may take several minutes to download or it may crash the email message because it is too long.
