IE INFORMATION NOTICE NO. 80-35, SUPPLEMENT NO. 1: LEAKING AND DISLODGED
IODINE-125 IMPLANT SEEDS

Addressees:

Medical licensees holding specific licenses for human use of byproduct material in sealed sources.

Purpose:

This information notice is a supplement to IE Information Notice No. 80-35, "Leaking and Dislodged Iodine-125 Implant Seeds" (Attachment 1). This information should serve as a reminder for licensees to review the suppliers' guidance accompanying the radioactive sources and the applicators used to implant the sources. No response to this notice is required.

Discussion:

Since issuance of Information Notice 80-35 on October 10, 1980, the NRC has reviewed reports of five additional incidents involving uptakes of iodine-125 resulting from leaking and dislodged implant seeds. These incidents are described below.

1. Forty iodine-125 seeds were implanted in a patient. The seeds were inserted with difficulty into the plastic tubes used in the implant instrument. There was no apparent difficulty in feeding the sterilized seeds from the plastic tubes into the implant instrument; however, during the process a few seeds were slightly crimped by the forceps causing damage to the seeds. Subsequent surveys detected iodine-125 in the urine and thyroid of the patient. The dose to the thyroid was estimated to be 9 rads.
2. An applicator being used during a prostate implant jammed during the procedure. The physician tried to free the applicator and subsequently ruptured one of the seeds. Subsequent surveys detected iodine-125 only in the physician's thyroid who performed the implant. The dose to the thyroid was estimated to be 120 millirads.
3. The radiation therapy physician felt some resistance while inserting one of the iodine-125 seeds. Rather than force the applicator being used to perform the prostate implant, the physician pulled back on the inserting rod of the applicator a second time and then continued to insert the seed without further difficulty. Subsequent surveys detected iodine-125 in the urine and thyroid of the patient. The dose to the thyroid was estimated to be 22 rads.

4. Iodine-125 was detected in the urine and thyroid of a patient during surveys performed following implantation of iodine-125 seeds for interstitial treatment of cancer of the prostate. Faulty (leaking) seeds were determined to be the cause of the iodine-125 uptake. The dose to the thyroid was estimated to be 10 rads.
5. Iodine-125 was detected in the urine and thyroid of two patients during surveys following transurethral resection procedures. In both cases, the use of electronic cauterization was determined to be the cause for the loss of integrity of the seeds. The dose to the thyroid in this incident was estimated to be 6.5 and 0.44 rads respectively.

No written response to this information notice is required. If you need additional information regarding this subject, contact the Administrator of the appropriate NRC Regional Office.

IE Information Notice No. 80-35: LEAKING AND DISLODGED IODINE-125 IMPLANT SEEDS

Description of Circumstances:

During surveys performed following the implant of iodine-125 seeds for interstitial treatment of cancer of the prostate, iodine-125 was detected in the patient's urine and thyroid. As a result of the iodine leakage, the patient's thyroid received an estimated eighty (80) rem dose.

The cause of the leakage of iodine-125 was determined to be physical damage to one of the seeds prior to implantation. The hospital staff had inserted the seeds into nylon tubing prior to steam sterilization in an autoclave. The nylon tubings were supplied with a permanent interstitial implant instrument, Model #6501, manufactured by Mick Radio-Nuclear Instruments, Incorporated. After autoclaving for six (6) minutes at 275°F (135°C) and 30 psi, the iodine-125 seeds could not be pushed out of the nylon tubing. Forceps and scissors had to be used to free the seeds and place them into the implant instrument. It was determined that, during this process, one of the iodine seeds had been superficially cut.

The surveys performed after the surgery indicated that some iodine-125 seeds had been dislodged. Some seeds were found on the floor, the operating table, and in suction liquids collected during surgery. In addition, an iodine-125 seed was found in the patient's urine specimen collected on the sixth day following implant surgery.

Notice to Licensee:

Your staff responsible for preparation and implantation of sealed sources of byproduct material should be made aware of the contents of this Information Notice. They should review handling procedures for the sealed sources, including methods of sterilization, to eliminate those procedures which could physically damage the sealed sources. Necessary procedures should be established to assure that, following implantation, proper surveys are performed for detecting leaking or dislodged sources.

No written response to this information Notice is required. If you need additional information regarding this subject, contact the Director of the appropriate NRC Regional Office.
