IE INFORMATION NOTICE NO. 82-20: CHECK VALVE PROBLEMS

Addressees:

All nuclear power reactor facilities holding an operating license (OL) or construction permit (CP).

Purpose:

This information notice is provided as a notification of potentially significant problems pertaining to check valves. It is expected that recipients will review the information for applicability to their facilities. No specific action or response is required at this time.

Description of Circumstances:

A number of problems were recently reported involving swing check valves supplied by two manufacturers. Palisades Nuclear Plant, which is an operating plant, reported severe damage to the internals of 6-inch Alloy Steel Products Company (ALOYCO) swing check valves used in the low-pressure safety injection system (LPSI).

Susquehanna Steam Electric Station, which is under construction, reported three separate problems with Pacific Company swing check valves that range in size from 6 inches to 20 inches installed in the residual heat removal (RHR), reactor core isolation cooling (RCIC), and core spray systems.

The valves are similar in design and service to numerous other swing check valves, manufactured by other companies, that have had similar problems in the past. (Ref. LER 50-298/77-18, 50-255/81-37, AO 50-331/75-23; IE Information Notices 80-41, 81-30 and 81-35)

Internal Damage to ALOYCO Valves:

During required modifications of the LPSI system at the Palisades Nuclear Plant, Consumers Power Co. of Michigan reported that two of the four LPSI swing check valves were found to have internal damage. In both valves the disc nut washer and the disc nut pin were missing and the valve body, clapper arm, disc clapper arm shaft, and clapper arm support were severely worn. The discs were still attached to their clapper arms; however, valve seat and disc sealing surfaces were damaged and leaks from the valves could have been excessive.

It was subsequently discovered that the remaining two LPSI check valves had similar internal damage. The four LPSI check valves at Palisades were manufactured by ALOYCO about 1968. They are 6-inch swing-type check valves with weld ends for attachment to Schedule 120 piping. All four valves were mounted vertically with the flow direction upward.

The swing check valves have an inline configuration with a ballooned or expanding area in the valve body for movement of the flapper-type disc. The disc is substantially larger than the nominal inside diameter of the pipe or valve. If the disc should become separated from the clapper arm, it would be trapped within the expanded portion of the valve body. This could lead to reduced LPSI flow or (with some small probability) the complete blockage of the line.

Operation of the swing check valve in the direction of flow (normal operation) causes the threaded shaft on the back of the valve disc to strike the valve body as it opens to the full-flow position. (The valve body is the ultimate limiter of disc opening.) During full-flow operation, there apparently is sufficient turbulence to cause the disc to chatter against the valve body. The valves at Palisades, which are used for extended periods during shutdown cooling, exhibited about 1/2 inch of wear of the threaded portion of the disc shaft (greater than the height of the disc nut). Although the disc nuts had been worn away, none of the discs had separated from its clapper arm because of the peening of the shafts to a larger diameter.

The ALOYCO check valves form the boundary between the LPSI and high-pressure safety injection (HPSI) systems at Palisades. The abnormal wear of the check valves was discovered during modifications of the LPSI piping to add leak-testing capability as required by NRC order, dated April 20, 1981, for Event V valve configurations. This order required the licensee to perform periodic leak-testing of check valves that form the interface between a high-pressure system connected to the reactor coolant system (RCS) and a low pressure system whose piping leads outside containment. Event V is defined as the failure of two in-series check valves to function as a pressure isolation barrier between a high-pressure system connected to the RCS and a lower pressure system extending beyond containment. This failure could cause an overpressurization and rupture of the low-pressure system, which would result in a LOCA that bypasses containment and simultaneously render inoperable some of the equipment needed to mitigate a LOCA.

Problems With Pacific Valves :

During start-up testing at the Susquehanna Steam Electric Station Unit 1, Pennsylvania Power and Light reported three problems with Pacific check valves: (1) disc assembly to body interference and excessive packing friction, (2) excessive wear at hinge arm/disc stud interface, and (3) disc stud breakage. The Pacific check valves are used in many non-safety systems as well as the residual heat removal, reactor core isolation cooling, and core spray systems.

1. Disc Assembly to Body Interference and Excessive Packing Friction

The interference problem was attributed to tolerance buildup by the valve manufacturer. Undetected, a deficiency of this type could render the valve unable to perform its safety function. The valves were subsequently reworked at Susquehanna. The packing friction problem was solved by changing packing type.

2. Excessive Wear at Hinge Arm/Disc Stud Interface

The excessive wear at the hinge arm/disc stud interface was identified on non-safety related valves. The hinges and discs involved in the excessive wear problem have been replaced in the safety related valves. The licensee will re-inspect the safety related valves to confirm that the modifications have been effective in reducing wear. These inspections will be performed after the valves have operated for a sufficient time period that wear might be expected.

3. Disc Stud Breakage

The problem with the fractured stud, which is an integral part of the disc/stud casting, appears to be similar to a earlier failure of an Anchor/Darling valve (50-298/77-18). Although these failures were similar, the cause of the Susquehanna failures appears to be a metallurgical problem that is limited to the Pacific valves in this case. In the safety related valves, the licensee is replacing the CA15 discs with discs manufactured from A516 Grade 70 plate with a stud fabricated from the same material threaded and welded to the disc. In the RCIC and HPCI exhaust systems, the swing check valve is being replaced by a lift check valve. The inherent damping action of this type valve is believed by the licensee to make it more able to withstand the erratic steam flow conditions.
