IE INFORMATION NOTICE NO. 84-55, SUPPLEMENT 1: SEAL TABLE LEAKS AT PWRs

Addressees:

All nuclear power reactor facilities holding an operating license (OL) or a construction permit (CP).

Purpose:

This supplement to Information Notice (IN) 84-55 provides additional information concerning seal table leaks and failures of compression type mechanical fittings. A correction also has been included in this supplement concerning the use of the term "SWAGELOK" fitting. It is expected that recipients will review the information for applicability to their facilities and consider actions, if appropriate, to preclude a similar problem occurring at their facilities. However, suggestions contained in this supplement do not constitute requirements; therefore, no specific action or written response is required.

Background:

IN 84-55 described two events that led to primary reactor coolant leaks at the seal table. The leaks were caused by failure of the mechanical seals during maintenance under high-pressure conditions. These events occurred at Sequoyah 1 and Zion 1. INPO Significant Event Report (SER) 43-84 and Supplement 1 to SER 43-84 also discuss these two events as well as the Trojan event (LER 84-014) that occurred on September 13, 1984.

Further review of the Sequoyah event by the Tennessee Valley Authority (TVA) determined the exact cause of the high-pressure seal failure. Their review showed that the design of the as-supplied cleaning tool had been modified by Sequoyah personnel and that these modifications produced a tool that would transfer force to the thimble tube high-pressure seal at a level sufficient to cause separation of the seal assembly. The original cleaning tool, supplied by Teleflex, Inc., consisted of a drivebox and flexible plastic tube that connected to the upper flare fitting at the end of the thimble tube. Use of the handcrank on the drivebox moved the cleaning tool into or out of the thimble tube. Excessive force could not be transmitted to the fitting of the high-pressure seal because the flexible plastic tube would be the weakest component subjected to stress. However, because of the flexibility of the plastic tube, the workers had difficulty feeding the cleaning device through the drivebox into the tube. During 1978 or 1979, plant personnel, to compensate for this difficulty, had modified the tool by a metal extension sleeve that threaded onto the thimble tube flare fitting. This modified tool was remodified on several occasions because of missing pieces or further attempts to improve tool stability.

Notice 84-55

The tool that was used during the Cycle 3 refueling consisted of a base that slipped over the thimble tube assembly at the seal table and a metal extension piece that threaded on to the thimble tube flare fitting to which the drivebox was attached. This tool was lost during containment cleanup activities before plant startup. When the decision was made to clean the tubes at power, another tool was fabricated with a slightly shorter base, which did not mate flush with the upper extension piece. Shims were used to try to correct this problem, but they appear to have still allowed some fulcrum effect causing the seal to fail.

In addition to the events discussed in IE IN 84-55, several other similar events occurred during the past year. These are briefly described below.

1. On October 23, 1984 an unisolatable reactor coolant leak occurred at Catawba Nuclear Station, Unit 1 (LER 84-18). The unit was in hot standby with reactor coolant system (RCS) pressure at 1500 psig and temperature at 440°F. The leak occurred when the stainless steel conduit containing an incore thermocouple separated from the mechanical compression tube fitting. An approximate 5 gpm leak rate occurred and a total of 12,000 gallons of coolant from the RCS leaked to the containment floor and equipment sump.

Evaluation of the failure indicated that the conduit had not been fully inserted into the fitting and the fitting had been tightened only 13/20 turns. The required number of turns is 1 1/4 turns. Another thermocouple also was found to be loose. The cause of the failure was evaluated as a construction/installation deficiency.

2. Two events occurred at the Rancho Seco Nuclear Plant. The first occurred on April 20, 1984, when a 3/8 stainless steel sensing line blew out of a compression fitting under system pressure (2200 psig) following routine recalibration of a pressurizer level transmitter. The second event occurred on July 31, 1984. A leak was noticed on a steam generator level transmitter sensing line fitting. An attempt to tighten the fitting worsened the leak. Before attempting to further tighten the fitting the technician tapped the sensing line with a wrench, whereupon the stainless steel line blew out of the fitting.

Both of the fittings involved were installed during or after a 1983 refueling outage. A decision was made to inspect 1444 compression fittings installed during that period. The inspection revealed that approximately 3% of the tube fittings were improperly made up as a result of poor workmanship. A few instances of improperly oriented or missing ferrules were found as gross errors, but the majority of the deficiencies found concerned the improper location of the ferrule with respect to the end of the tube.

These problems were attributable to poor workmanship in the cutting of the tubing and also to potential spring back of the tubing after firm seating in the fitting during initial assembly.

3. On October 25, 1983, a dewater and air drying operation was being conducted at 39 thimble locations on the seal table at D. C. Cook Unit 1. The reactor was at about 50% power throughout the 2-day effort. At the conclusion of the maintenance effort, all guide tube connections were checked and found satisfactory except for one. This fitting had apparently not been properly assembled because the middle high-pressure seal came loose causing the thimble to rise approximately 5 inches above the seal table before it stopped. Clamps were reconnected to prevent any further rising of the thimble out of the core.

Discussion:

Compression fittings are used throughout nuclear plants in primary, secondary, and auxiliary systems. In some applications, failure of a fitting may be nothing more than a nuisance. In other applications serious events could follow the failure of one of these fittings; however, past failures of fittings cannot be traced to any one single source. The examples cited indicate that the failures are varied and can include the following: improper maintenance, improper installation, improperly designed tools, and improper materials.

In the Sequoyah event, modifications made to the cleaning tool were not controlled adequately by existing formal programs. There were no records that any of the modifications to the tool had been technically evaluated or tested to determine their effect on the thimble tube seal. Lack of such controls appears to have been a significant precursor to the event that occurred.

In the Trojan, Rancho Seco, D. C. Cook, and Catawba events, the immediate cause was improper installation of the fittings coupled with corrective maintenance on the fittings while the RCS was hot and pressurized. Compression fittings exhibit a mode of failure involving pullout of the tubing from the fitting when subjected to an axial load. Tensile tests have demonstrated this mode of failure can occur when the ferrule is improperly located on the tube during initial assembly. When this occurs, it can cause a substantial reduction in the safety factor of the fitting. Thus, maintenance on the fitting under these conditions has led to a substantial number of fitting failures.

Some events involving the failure of compression fittings have become known because of the circumstances that followed the fitting failure. However, because of the varied applications of the compression fitting, many failures of fittings, or problems associated with the fittings, probably go unreported. Because of the number of severe events that have occurred during the past year, it is appropriate that positive steps be taken to reduce the number of similar events from occurring.

In this regard, some utilities have revised procedures on the assembly and maintenance of these fittings to address the problems mentioned above. They also have upgraded training efforts on the assembly and maintenance of the fittings and have enacted stricter controls on when maintenance can be conducted (e.g., restricting maintenance on fittings used in hot, pressurized systems). Additionally, Westinghouse is developing fitting inspection guidelines and detailed acceptance criteria.

In the original IE information notice, reference was made to the failure of "SWAGELOK" fittings. It was found that at Sequoyah and Trojan the compression fittings used were hybrid fittings assembled using parts from other vendors, including Crawford Fitting Co. Brand names of other compression fittings include SNO-Trik, Gyrolok, Megalok, Ringlok, Unilok, Wadelok, etc. Apparently, many of the parts are used interchangeably. In the case of Sequoyah, "Gyrolok" and "Swagelok" parts were used to construct the fittings. Therefore, use of the name "SWAGELOK" fitting in the above applications was inaccurate. A "SWAGELOK" fitting has a nut, front and back ferrule, and body, all manufactured by Crawford. In fact, Crawford cautions against interchanging parts of tube fittings made by other manufacturers with "SWAGELOK" tube fitting parts.

No specific action or written response is required by this information notice. If you have any questions regarding this matter, please contact the Regional Administrator of the appropriate NRC regional office or the technical contact listed below.
