IE INFORMATION NOTICE NO. 83-63, SUPPLEMENT 1: POTENTIAL FAILURES OF WESTINGHOUSE
ELECTRIC CORPORATION TYPE SA-1
DIFFERENTIAL RELAYS

Addressees:

All nuclear power reactor facilities holding an operating license (OL) or construction permit (CP).

Purpose:

This information notice supplements the NRC Information Notice No. 83-63, "Potential Failures of Westinghouse Electric Corporation (W) Type SA-1 Differential Relays," dated September 26, 1983. That information notice addressed the random trip output caused by relays containing S.T. SEMICON silicon-controlled rectifiers in type SA-1 relays.

This information notice supplement is provided as notification of two potentially significant problems pertaining to insufficient surge-withstand-capability (SWC) and internal capacitor failures in W type SA-1 relays. These problems were identified by W and Brown Boveri Electric (BBE) since the issuance of Information Notice No. 83-63.

Description of Circumstances:

W type SA-1 relays are differential relays used on some safety-related systems and designed to sense a fault within the differential circuit to protect either a transformer, generator, switchgear, or distribution system bus. A differential relay trip output will open the circuit breakers to isolate the differential circuit when a fault occurs. Internal capacitor failures or insufficient SWC could result in a malfunction of the SA-1 relay, thereby preventing the isolation of the differential circuit when a fault occurs and possibly damaging safety-related electrical equipment or systems important to safety.

On October 24, 1983, BBE informed the NRC of capacitor failures in W type SA-1 relays. On November 1 and November 3, 1983, W and BBE reported supplemental information pertaining to the capacitor failures and also provided information that the relays did not fully meet the SWC requirements of ANSI C37.90-1978.

In regard to the capacitor problem, W type SA-1 relays contain tantalum capacitors. These capacitors have leaked electrolyte, apparently as a result of corrosion. Rather than replacing only the tantalum capacitors, W proposed to replace the entire printed circuit module with a new module part No. 408C673G01 to bring the relay in line with the latest design.

The second problem pertains to insufficient SWC requirements of the W type SA-1 relay. A non-nuclear utility informed w about an SA-1 relay that provided incorrect trip signals in a protection application. The utility believed the incorrect trips were caused by electrical noise. W engineers investigated the situation by testing in accordance with Section 9, SWC tests, of ANSI C37.90-1978, and found incorrect trips for crest values of the oscillatory SWC test value above 1.8 kV. This does not meet the full range requirement specified in the ANSI standard.

As a result of this finding, W developed a surge protection module that brings the SWC capability to a level in excess of the ANSI requirements. SA-1 relays having style number 154C21G01 incorporates the new surge protection module. W recommends that any SA-1 relay not equipped with a surge suppression module should have this module added.

The attached list of SA-1 relay customers was submitted to the NRC by W and BBE. It should be noted that this list may be incomplete and does not include all end-users.

Although no written response to this information notice supplement is required, it is suggested that licensees review the information conveyed by this notice for applicability to their facilities.

BBE has informed the NRC that detailed information pertaining to required SA-1 relay field modification, part replacement instructions, relay calibration instructions, and documentation changes was distributed via BBE regional offices to its known SA-1 relay customers. However, it is not clear that other users of SA-1 relays have been so notified. Accordingly, users of SA-1 relays, who have not received these instructions, may request them from Westinghouse Electric Corporation, Power Systems, Relay-Instrument Division, 4300 Coral Ridge Drive, Coral Springs, Florida 33065.

If you have any questions regarding this matter, please contact the Regional Administrator of the appropriate NRC Regional Office, or the listed technical contact.
