

Short Bio
David A. Taylor

After graduating from the University of Missouri School of Law in 1975 Mr. Taylor was a founding partner in the Kansas City law firm of Taylor & Murphy where it was unfairly reported that he spent most of his time reading Sports Illustrated and trying to figure out how to drum up business. He later developed a reputation as a “First Amendment” lawyer in Kansas City representing some of the most upstanding massage parlor operators in the central United States. Contrary to ugly rumors circulating at the time he was not booted out of his private practice by his partner but rather was hired by a young John Ashcroft as a Missouri Assistant Attorney General where (depending upon whether or not there are any current or former employees of the Missouri Attorney General’s Office in the audience) Mr. Taylor was either single handedly responsible for cleaning up all dioxin contaminated waste in the State of Missouri, or he attended a bunch of dioxin related hearings and, on at least one occasion kept himself from being held in contempt of court.

After floating around Jefferson City, Missouri in a couple of private practices for ten to fifteen years, and, becoming famous as the best damn pig crap lawyer in the central part of the state he migrated to the Navajo Nation Department of Justice where he now acts like he knows a lot about things he knew nothing about two years ago.
