IE INFORMATION NOTICE NO. 84-06: STEAM BINDING OF AUXILIARY FEEDWATER PUMPS

Addressees:

All pressurized water reactor (PWR) facilities holding an operating license (OL) or construction permit (CP).

Purpose:

This information notice provides notification of a problem pertaining to steam binding in the auxiliary feedwater (AFW) pumps due to leakage from the main feedwater system. It is expected that addressees will review the information provided for applicability to their facilities. No specific action or response is required.

Description of Circumstances:

On April 19, 1983, Carolina Power and Light reported that the two motor-driven AFW pumps started automatically on low steam generator level following a manual scram at the H. B. Robinson nuclear plant. After two minutes, the B train AFW pump tripped. The trip was attributed to a signal from low discharge pressure.

The discharge piping from the motor-driven AFW train is connected to the main feedwater piping near the steam generator. (See Figure 1.) Hot water, about 425°F, from the main feedwater system leaked back through the first check valve, the motor-operated valve, and the second check valve to the pump and flashed to steam because of the lower pressure in the AFW system. (A significant amount of steam was vented from the pump casing during the testing to determine the cause of the trip.) When the motor-driven pumps started, the instrumentation sensed a low discharge pressure. The steam binding reduced flow and prevented discharge pressure from increasing above the low pressure set-point in the 30 seconds before the instrumentation tripped the pump. Condensation could have further lowered the pressure to the sensors.

Robinson had experienced leakage through valves in the discharge piping and consequent trips of the A train AFW pump on June 11 and 16, 1981. On July 21, 1983 the steam-driven pump was declared inoperable because of potential steam binding caused by leakage from the feedwater system. Crystal River 3 reported two steam-voiding events which caused the emergency feedwater system train B to be declared inoperable. Two similar events were reported at D.C. Cook Unit 2 in 1981. (Reference LERs 50-261/83-044, 83-016, and 81-016; 50-301/82-076, and 83-045; and 50-316/81-032 and 81-063.)

A special interim procedure at Robinson calls for the venting of all three pumps once each shift, monitoring of the casing temperatures, and operating the pumps as required to prevent saturation conditions in the system. Cook also monitors the AFW system temperature. Robinson is exploring a design change or replacement of the check valves as a long-term solution.

The safety implication of these events is that leakage into the AFW from the feedwater system constitutes a common mode failure that can lead to the loss of all AFW capability. Further, there is the potential for water hammer damage if an AFW pump discharges relatively cold water into a region of the piping system that contains steam. Since the design of the AFW at Robinson is typical of other PWRs, the potential for backleakage exists in other operating plants. Routine monitoring of the AFW system temperature would detect backleakage so that the system could be periodically vented to prevent steam binding until an appropriate long-term solution is developed.

No written response to this notice is required. If you have any questions regarding this matter, please contact the Regional Administrator of the appropriate NRC Regional Office, or this office.
