SALLISAW

Sallisaw County seat of Sequoyah County is located at the edge of the famed Cookson Hills to the north and the navigation channel of the Arkansas River to the south. Its name is from the French "salaisiau" meaning "salt provision." Indians, early settlers, explorers and trappers were familiar with the natural salt deposits found by many nearby streams.

In 1820 some Cherokee Indians migrated from Georgia and in 1838-39 the remainder of the tribe was forced-marched over the "Trail of Tears" to what is now Oklahoma. The southern-most land assigned to them is the present Sequoyah County area. When Oklahoma was granted statehood in 1907 the county was named Sequoyah in honor of the famous Cherokee educator.

"The Grapes of Wrath" author John Steinbeck used sallisaw as the starting point for "okies" fleeing to California to escape the "dust bowl" drought days. Actually, the eastern part of Oklahomahas always been woodsy and picturesque; it was the western part where the dry, flat land and blowing winds created the "dust bowl."

Charles "Pretty Boy" Floyd and other notorious outlaws who used the rugged and inaccessible Cookson Hills to hide in during the 1930's would surely marvel at the four-lane interstate highways, the diesel trains and the barge traffic on the Arkansas River that now connects Sallisaw to the world.

Present-Day Sallisaw is an expanding center for commerce and tourism. Lakes for fishing and water sports, drives to historic landmarks, horse racing at Oklahoma's first pari-mutuel track, state parks for camping and hiking, golf fairies (or just relaxing) all begin and end at Sallisaw!
