NRC CHAIRMAN GREGORY B. JACZKO'S REMARKS AT THE COMMISSION MEETING ON THE OFFICE OF HUMAN RESOURCES AND EEO

Note: The Commission was briefed today by staff on the work of the Office of Human Resources and the Equal Employment Opportunity Office.

Opening Remarks

Good morning. The Commission meets today to receive a briefing by the Human Resources Office and the Equal Employment Opportunity Office. The work of these two offices is so important because the NRC is only as good as its people. As I recently noted to the staff, the NRC is committed to being both a great place to work and a place that does great work.

The Commission is fortunate to represent an agency with such highly-qualified, diverse, dedicated, and effective employees. To make sure that remains the case, we need to continually cultivate an open and collaborative working environment. We need to continue to have the type of workplace where our employees can be engaged in meaningful and challenging work and maintain a good work-life balance. And we need to continue to have the type of workplace where differences in approach, background, styles, traditions, and views are valued, respected, and utilized to make us a stronger agency.

The Commission appreciates the high-quality work of both the Human Resources Office and Equal Employment Opportunity Office staff to support the entire agency. I look forward to today's meeting to discuss the important human capital and diversity management initiatives they are spearheading.

Before we begin with the presentations, would any of my fellow Commissioners like to make opening remarks?
