Mr. Hopkins,

Binning the comments is the first step in the process. The staff will separate the comments into respective categories (binning) and then draft responses to the comments.

Sincerely,

Doug Bruner

Doug, I trust that "binning" does not mean that you will merely "bin it". Norm

The attached is a follow up to my recent submission to NRC and USACE.

It occurs to me that there may be a national security issue. When I have flown across China on a clear day you see roads running on the ridges with towns on the hill tops each having their own large artificial utility water body. I am also reminded of Europe many years ago in WWII with each major town having its own coke fired coal gas plant and underground piped distribution system. Having large monolithic electric power generation and grid systems exposed to today's cyber-terrorism doesn't make much sense to me. Hydrogen energy storage and PV systems have begun to take on an appeal.

Please acknowledge receipt. Kind regards, Norman
