It would appear that Mr. Popik is making an entirely reasonable and prudent request. Current conditions in Fukushima and Nebraska bear witness to the vulnerability of the spent fuel pools, which do not seem to be afforded the same care as the reactors themselves. Let's make sure the spent fuel has the same power redundancy as the reactors during its journey from the reactor to (hopefully) dry cask storage. And by the way, let's not build any more reactors until the spent fuel storage issue has been adequately addressed.
