Allison McFarlane

Dear McFarlane,

New rules, yes!

An Environmental Impact Statement and Rules that spell out the true unsubsidized costs of nuclear power, including decommissioning costs -- and that take full account of those true costs.

An EIS clearly compares the environmental footprint of nuclear power from the mine to the construction and operation of the reactor to the disposal of the waste and decommissioning of the reactor with the footprint of renewables and energy efficiency.

Rules that require proven waste isolation methods before the licensing or relicensing of any reactor.

Rules that require that fuel assemblies in overcrowded onsite fuel pools be removed and placed in hardened, on-site cask storage within a reasonable time and before reactors are relicensed.

An EIS that fully assesses the claims of nuclear power in terms of its claims to price competitiveness and environmental safety.

Take care of and protect our (your, my, our) human habitat/home/ecological niche.

Sincerely,

Barbara Hill
