NRC Again Honored Among Top Supporters of Historically Black Colleges and Universities

The 2014 annual survey conducted by U.S. Black Engineer & Information Technology magazine lists the Nuclear Regulatory Commission as one of the government agencies considered most supportive of the engineering departments of Historically Black Colleges and Universities (HBCU).

The 12th annual survey is a result of a poll among deans of the accredited HBCU engineering programs and the corporate-academic alliance known as Advancing Minorities' Interest in Engineering.

“This is the seventh consecutive year the NRC has been recognized by U.S. Black Engineer & Information Technology magazine for our support of the engineering departments of Historically Black Colleges and Universities,” said Vonna Ordaz, director of the NRC’s Office of Small Business and Civil Rights. “That’s quite an honor and credit for this recognition is due to the continuous efforts of NRC employees and our agency’s special programs.”
