Should you get any questions regarding NRC information in the Wikileaks documents, you can respond with the statement below (approved by the State Department) or simply refer the reporter to me:

The NRC has an active international program that supports U.S. interests abroad in regards to the safe and secure use of nuclear materials and the development of effective regulatory organizations in countries around the world.

It's possible that State Department documents may contain information regarding NRC's international program. Such information would be considered non-public and not intended for public disclosure.

The NRC does not comment on materials which may have been leaked. We cannot speak to the authenticity of any documents provided to the media.

Good morning,

Since the exposure of "sensitive" information in the media last week relating to NSA, some news services have been generating articles which have links to the Guardian. The Guardian reports have links to a "sensitive" order and presentation. Employees could, if they elect to, open these documents on our systems, resulting in potential spills. We had similar situation a couple years ago with the Wikileaks material. Could you please prepare a simple reminder to staff about this, and to not open "sensitive" materials even though they are available on the Internet. The reminder should be coordinated with NSIR.

Thank you,

Darren
