Hello,

OK, about the Cesium-137. I was thinking of that the same as the ECD device - in that I was trying to create an internal paper trail so that it doesn't get thrown away in error when I retire and a new RSO is on board. But no worries, I can do that a different way. It is listed as a general source on our instrument, so we can remove that one from my list (do I need to make that more formal somehow)?

With the Ni-63 disposal, attached is the final receipt from Agilent stating that they are now in possession of the device. Is that all you need (I have other paperwork, but that one seemed appropriate).

Thank you very much for all your help. Don't hesitate to email if you have further questions

Dave
