

Sept. 15, 1991

Dear NRC Commissioners,

Since I cannot attend the hearings because they are being held during work hours I wanted to put some comments in writing to be part of the public record.

First of all I want to voice my displeasure that the seismic study was done by P.G.&E. This is the same company that for 6 years kept the information of the Horgrri Fault's discovery from the public. I don't feel they can be trusted to be impartial on this matter. An Earthquake study should be done by an independent scientific organization such as the United States Geological Survey so we know the information we receive is accurate. We folks who live with the danger of this plant being next to an active earthquake fault deserve this consideration.

I'd like to think the N.R.C. is truly the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and not the Nuclear Rubberstamp Commission but I suppose your actions on this matter will tell us which role you choose.

Thank You,

John Beccia

The first part of the document discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions. It emphasizes that every entry should be supported by a valid receipt or invoice. This ensures transparency and allows for easy verification of the data.

In the second section, the author details the various methods used to collect and analyze the data. This includes both manual and automated processes. The goal is to ensure that the information is both reliable and up-to-date.

The third part of the document focuses on the challenges faced during the data collection process. These include issues such as incomplete records, inconsistent formatting, and the need for regular updates. The author provides several strategies to overcome these challenges, such as implementing standardized procedures and using data validation tools.

Finally, the document concludes with a summary of the key findings and recommendations. It stresses the importance of ongoing monitoring and review to ensure that the data remains accurate and relevant over time. The author also suggests areas for future research and improvement.
