Dear Mr. Tarver,

On behalf of the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC), I am responding to your letter dated May 27, 2018, in which you appealed the agency's decision related to your Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request NRC-2018-000362. In that request you sought "all records of the Federal Real Property Profile (FRPP) for the NRC." On May 18, 2018, the NRC responded that the scope of your request, as written, was sufficiently broad such that it would exceed the 2 hours of search time and 100 pages of duplication to which you are entitled without charge. You have previously indicated your unwillingness to pay fees and have been denied a fee waiver. Thus, the NRC closed your request on the basis that it would incur fees. You now appeal the NRC's denial to conduct a search for records.

Acting on your appeal, I have determined that the scope of your initial request was construed too broadly, and that the NRC possesses less than 100 pages of responsive records. Therefore I have granted your appeal and am providing the records possessed by the NRC.

This is the final agency decision. As set forth in the FOIA (5 U.S.C. 552(a)(4)(B)), you can seek judicial review of this decision in a district court of the United States in the district in which you reside or have your principal place of business, in the district where the agency's records are situated, or in the District of Columbia.

As part of the 2007 FOIA amendments, the Office of Government Information Services (OGIS) was created to offer mediation services to resolve disputes between FOIA requesters and Federal agencies as a nonexclusive alternative to litigation. Using OGIS services does not affect your right to pursue litigation. If you are requesting access to your own records (which is considered a Privacy Act request), you should know that OGIS does not have the authority to handle requests made under the Privacy Act of 1974.
