I am an independent Medical Practice Consultant working in the Urology space. My entire career has been as COO in large urology groups; groups that inherently have prostate cancer patients; patients that potentially require, during the process of fighting their cancer, the administration of Radium 223; Xofigo.

The issue has been the stiff requirements for training, especially where one individual is trained and then not available during a course of treatment, or in a more rural area where no one is trained and bringing in an authorized user have proved to be very difficult. I would like to voice my opinion that I think something could be done to adjust the training requirements so that prostate cancer patients can be better served.

Thank you,
Kathy Hille
