

POOR ORIGINAL

Dear Sirs:

"Take your nuclear plants and shove them. We don't want them around no more." Whether it was a human mistake or a mistake in plant, the accident at Three Mile Island happened. Anything that happens once can happen again. Whether here or somewhere else. This time, maybe it will be worse. All I know is if there would have been an evacuation I, and my wife, would have had to leave our home. We couldn't have come back for a while. We would have virtually lost all our possessions and had to start all over again.

A study, just out, shows that babies born while still unborn at the time had a higher death rate than usual. Coincidence or not, it's still scary. And we don't need it. There's no reason for people of the U.S., or any other nation, to have nuclear problems on the back of their minds.

POOR ORIGINAL

Sure, it's an effective way to use energy, but it's too dangerous. The world should stick to something safer. Such as more hydroelectric plants and more coal production. Whatever the solution, Not Nuclear Plants.