PERIOD OF SEPTEMBER 1980 THROUGH JUNE 1981

In 1980, the NRC instituted a program for Systematic Assessment of Licensee Performance (SALP). The NRC staff began collecting available observations and, based on those observations, evaluating the performance of power reactor licensees (including construction permit holders) with respect to nuclear safety. During the first annual cycle of this program, licensee performance was evaluated in two steps: first, by a SALP Board in the appropriate NRC Regional Office; and then by a SALP Review Group at NRC Headquarters. The SALP Review Group produced a single report summarizing its assessments for power reactors throughout the U.S. This report was issued in November 1981 (NUREG-0834, "Final Report, NRC Licensee Assessments").

- (2) Establishment of new evaluation criteria which are not dependent upon the average performance level.
- (3) Establishment of a process for taking licensee comments into account.
