Dear Sirs:

Our company transferred the operations of its analytical laboratory from Indianapolis, Indiana to Burlington, Massachusetts. One item of laboratory test equipment -- a Varian Aerograph gas chromatograph Model 284030/00 -- contained a nickel 63 foil detector cell controlled under U.S. AEC Byproduct Materials License #13-03022-02 dated March 28, 1972.

Since several personnel changes occurred at the time of the laboratory transfer, we unfortunately were not aware that the item was under license until it was recently unpacked at our Burlington location. In checking the license we found that we had violated conditions #10 and #12 regarding location and supervision of the device. On March 19, 1975 the attached letter was sent to the AEC requesting a license revision.

Following this, I was contacted by Mr. Ronald Paul of the U.S. NRC in Chicago, and I have since contacted Mr. Robert McClintock of the Region I office in King of Prussia, Pa. It was suggested that I contact your division to request a transfer of the license to the new location.

Let me affirm that the intended use of the device in question is unchanged and that the only revisions requested are in the physical location of the gas chromatograph and the supervisors of the operation.

In reference to Form 313, the following items are affected:
