General Comment

If the NRC wants to address matters in environmental justice particularly in low-income neighborhoods they need to create a budget. At this point its about economic justice in low-income neighborhoods. If NRC want to see environmental changes they must first invest in these communities monetarily. These environments will not get better unless time, understanding, finances, and change is implemented. Years and years go by an organizations talk about justice for low-income communities but nothing ever gets done. The roads are still riddled with pot holes, The air is still polluted with toxins and trash is every where! The homes are worn and abandoned, creating a nuisance and a habitat for stray cats and rodents. Is just talk of "environmental justice" the standard or is there going to be serious implementation?
