General Comment

I'm writing about the impact that restarting the Palisades Nuclear Plant would have on me and on my family. My cousins and brother and I own our family cottage in Palisades Park, having inherited it from our fathers, who inherited it from their father. Though it is a summer home, it is our true family homestead, and has been since 1945, when our grandparents, who had been coming to Palisades since the 1920s, bought their own cottage as my uncle came home from being a POW in WWII. We later bought another lot, just below our cottage. Our two properties are home for all of us. My grandfather did much work on the cottage, and my grandmother painted murals on the walls. All of our family have put many hours of toil keeping it in good shape, and many hours of pure joy being at our beloved cottage, and spending time with each other. My father's ashes are spread on our property around the cottage, the one place he could truly relax, a place he had first come to in 1928 as an infant. It is not just a place we go in the summer. It is our home, the one constant in our lives. If there were to be an incident and we could never return, it would be a loss of more than property. And it is deeply disturbing to imagine what would happen if we were there during an accident (and concerning to imagine what would happen to everyone in the miles around the plant). Though I am for nuclear power as clean energy, I am deeply concerned about a company which has never run a nuclear plant restarting a nuclear plant, an effort which has never been attempted before. I worry for our cottage. I worry for our health. And as a resident of the Great Lakes states, I worry about the safety of one of the most important assets our state and our country have -- the Great Lakes. There is much to gain from nuclear power, but so much to lose from this untested endeavor. Too much. Thank you. Tamesin Eldredge
