Re: Radioactive Waste being used in consumer products

Dear Staff:

In a world full of outrageous acts by our government in behalf of Big Business, I find the idea of recycling radioactive waste into consumer products particularly disturbing.

What in heaven's name is going on in your minds?

Some of the places where radioactive metal could pop up, such as dental braces or fillings, would be particularly objectionable in terms of long term exposure to radioactivity.

The idea of selling this material to scrap metal dealers stinks! The people responsible for this idea should be subject to individual civil suits.

No amount of radioactivity in consumer products is acceptable!

Sincerely,

Allan P. Brison
