Dear Secretary:

I am writing to express my concerns about the DOE rolling radioactive metals to remove scrap debris that will eventually end up in products that we and our children and grandchildren will be using in the future. I think that if those metals were used in bridge construction or as reinforcement in concrete structures the radioactivity might not harm anyone. I can think of any number of other metal products that expose users to unhealthy levels of radiation if those contaminated scrap metals were used in their manufacture.
