

Ethel R. Eaton has provided advice and assistance to federal and state agencies, local governments, consultants and project proponents in the 106 process for over twenty years. After receiving her doctorate from Brown University in archeology and the history of technology, she excavated, taught and held research positions at universities and museums in Italy, Scotland and the United States. Her work experience includes review and compliance at State Historic Preservation Offices in two states, Maryland and Virginia. For the past seventeen years she has worked at the Virginia Department of Historic Resources, where she serves as the manager of the Office of Review and Compliance.
