

Maureen Conley has spent 15 years as a trade journalist covering the nuclear industry. She has written extensively about issues related to nonproliferation, plutonium disposition, high and low-level waste disposal, DOE cleanup, Yucca Mountain, WIPP, and the storage and transportation of spent fuel. She also worked as Director of Communications for U.S. Nuclear Waste Negotiator Richard Stallings and as a policy analyst for a federal contractor supporting former DOE waste program director Dan Dreyfus. She helped launch a monthly newsletter devoted exclusively to spent fuel storage and transportation. And for the past six years, she has covered the spent fuel cask industry and NRC licensing activities as a freelance writer for Platts/McGraw-Hill. Maureen has a B.A. in Political Science from Duke University.
